2020

The UK Register of Career Development Professionals is the single national point of reference for ensuring and promoting the professional status of career development practitioners across the whole sector in the UK.

The Careers Strategy, and the Statutory Guidance published in January 2018 and updated in October 2018, encourage employers to engage Registered Career Development Professionals.

Proving that you are a professional

While anyone can call themselves a Career Adviser/Coach or Consultant and provide services, without being qualified, being on the UK Register of Career Development Professionals (the Register) immediately conveys the message that you are qualified to practice.

In a competitive world your registration validates that you are professionally qualified in a career development subject to a minimum of QCF Level 6/SCQF level 11, adhere to the CDI Code of Ethics and undertake and record a minimum of 25 hours CPD each year to maintain and develop your skills and knowledge. Importantly you can then call yourself a Registered Career Adviser/Coach/Consultant, use the Registered Professional logo and the letters RCDP (Registered Career Development Professional) after your name.

Qualified teachers who have a role as a Careers Leader/Co-ordinator and who also hold one of the careers education qualifications can also join the Register and call themselves a Registered Careers Leader/Co-ordinator. They would however also need a career guidance qualification in order to provide personal career guidance career guidance to students.

The Register is of value to all practitioners, whichever part of the sector they work in, including managers and trainers. Private practitioners find it particularly useful to advertise their services via the Find a Career Development Professional facility. If you are employed you can also do this by adding your personal profile showing what services are offered by your company.

Continuous Professional Development (CPD) Requirement

All registrants must undertake a minimum of 25 hours CPD per year which must be recorded in the CPD area of the CDI website to enable the Professional Development Manager to check that the CPD has been undertaken and that this requirement of Registration has been met. Alternative arrangements for accessing the recording of CPD can be made with employers so that employees who are on the Register do not have to record their CPD in two places. Please contact the Professional Development Manager for further information.

The members' only CPD Resources area of the website also provides information on on-line learning, publications and live training events which can be used as CPD. There is also an A to Z of CPD which provides information on a range of ideas for different methods of undertaking CPD. Back copies of Career Matters and the NICEC Journal are also available there.

Each month CDI members are sent a Newsletter containing suggestions for CPD activities related to a range of topics.

The Careers Strategy, and the Statutory Guidance published in January 2018 and updated in October 2018, encourage employers to engage Registered Career Development Professionals.

This area of the website is where you can promote the career development services that you offer. It is open to all registrants across the entire career development sector and across the UK. It is not just for the use of those people in private practice. Use of this area is optional but highly recommended.

Prospective employers and clients access this area of the website to find career development professionals in their area and across the UK.

It is important that your Profile in this section is succinct, includes the qualification which entitles you to be on the Register and abides by the CDI Code of Ethics. There is a limit of 300 words.
