

Liane Hambly

Liane's Fellowship recognises a hard-working, skilled and innovative trainer who is both well-known and well-loved in the careers sector across the UK and beyond.

She has been a tutor on the QCG courses at Nottingham Trent, Huddersfield and Coventry University, and is now a freelance trainer.

She has worked in Careers Wales, Skills Development Scotland, and the National Careers Service amongst others, and has been instrumental in helping these careers services develop consistent models of guidance and quality standards which have had a huge impact on how guidance is delivered.

In Scotland, she worked with Skills Development Scotland to design a coaching approach to career guidance and also a 'train the trainers' programme.

Liane has an international profile having presented at international Thought Leader conferences and delivered training for guidance counsellors in Ireland.

She is the co-author with Ciara Bomford, of "Creative Career Coaching: Theory into Practice" and has written several articles on aspects of career choice and decision making.

Liane has also been a member of the CDI's Professional Development Committee, retiring from the Committee in 2018, and a long-term member of the Institute of Career Guidance and the CDI, and has contributed greatly to the delivery of training on behalf of both organisations.
